The regulations, made by the Governor in Council under the Harbour Ordinance appear to be exactly, what were required, and will be useful in preventing accidents and in facilitating the settlement of responsibility when accidents do occur. One great merit they possess is their small number and extreme simplicity. There are in all eleven regulation's divided into three sections. The first section, comprising six regulations, defines the fairways and layedown the rules to be observed in their navigation; the second section defines the men-of-war anchorage; and the third section, comprising four regulations, applies to steam lunches. The that has been done is to discover that an internecessity for a definition of the flirwire wis smaly demonstrated in the trial of the colligian ages hot woon the Glenfriein and Camarta. In that trial on behalf of the Camorta, the existence of a southern fairway was disputed. Naquestion on that point can be raised in any future trial, for the limits of the southern fairway are clearly defined in the new regulations. In the Glenfruin Camorta case the point was also raised whether yearels navigating the fileway were bound by the ordinary rules of the road or by the rules to be observed in navigating parrow passages. This point is also settled in the new regula tions, which provide that the rules of the road are to be observed. It is further prowided that vessels of over fifty tons proceeding through either of the fairways are to fly a pendant at the highest masthead for in Peking rendering it virtually inacces ward-red for the southern fairway, white for the central, and blue for the northern. time of the Glenfruin-Camorta collision profrom the wharf, or, if she had, the argument much parrower limits.

Commenting on the establishment of a seminary of Oriental languages at Berlin, the Globe says:-No stone is being left unturned by the German Government in the effort to encourage and develop a foreign trade. To-day we have naws of an important measure, namely, the establishment of a Seminary of Oriental Languages in connection with the University of Berlin. Familiarity with Eastern tongues will virtually provide them with a passport to Eastern markets. Of course the German Government is only following up the education policy which it has practised for many years, and which has almost internationalised the German traier. Modern languages-first the European, and now the Oriental-are the leading subjects in the Gorman code; while in this country they have been treated with studied neglect. We recognise in this extension of the facilities provided for Gorman students of languages a legitimate and healthy form of "foreign compatition." We ought to have no difficulty in meeting it, for as the possessors already of an Eastern Empire we have a long start. But there is only too much reason to fear that nothing will be done. Germany will be allowed to get ahead of us, until one day we shall awake to the discovery that at Shanghai and Yokohama, at Singapore and Teheran, German trade is elbowing English trade out of the way. Surely there would be no bumiliation in observing the maxim " Ab hoste another squabble between the solicitors on the doneri" towards a country which shows itself so resourceful in ideas for the extension of trade. At present, however, he intended to push through with the case which he had commenced against Chang Chi, and he would formulate one charge against the prisoner in this case. Mr. Wilson objected; he thought that all the charges which it was intended to bring against the prisoner should be formulated now. His Worship thought if one charge was formulated that would be sufficient, and he adjourned the case for a week.

"The exact circumstances of their fate," he writes, "were never known,. but it became evident that Lar Wang and his fellow Wangs had been brutally murdered. It is impossible to apportion the blame of this teacherous act between Li Hung-chang and General Ching." Numerous versions have been given of this affair, and attempts were recently made to show that Li Chung tang had no share in it, having been overpowered by his colleague, Ching, and compelled to remain passive. But the fact is that the Vicercy himself does not rely upon any such method of exculpation. While admitting that a promise given to men under arms did not, in those days, possess in Chinese eyes the inviolable character attached to it by the English, the Vicercy nevertheless maintains that it was the fixed resolve of himself and General Ching to keep faith with the following additional evidence was taken as the Wangs and save their lives. The three most important people in the German Empira are, as every one knows, all of them very old men-the Emperor is 90. Moltke is 85. Bismarck is 75. The rule of the old men goes further, however, than this. The commandants of twelve out of the seventeen corps d'armée are of an average age of 65, and have on the average seen 48 years service. The oldest of them is General von Blumenthal, who is 76 and has been in the army 59 years. It was a pretty spot, overhung by precipitous cliffs, with ivy-fern climbing over them. A hot spring was bubbling violently through a hole in a rock. The ground was littered with the shells of unnumbered crayfish which had been boiled in this caldron of Nature's providing. Here we were joined by a native girl, Marileha by name, a bright-looking lass of eighteen, with merry eyes, and a thick but well-combed mass of raven hair (shot with orange in the sunlight) which she tossed about over her shoulders. On her back, thrown jauntily on, she had a shawl of feathers, which E-- wanted to buy, but found the young lady coy. She was a friend of Kate's, it appeared, was qualifying for a guide, and was to be our companion, we were told, through the day. I heard the some anxiety, for there was said to be a delicious basin of lukewarm water on one of the terraces, in which custom would provide towels, and officiate, in fact, as bathing women. The fair Polycasta had bathed Telemachus; and the Queen Helen, was to bathe us, and Miss Marileha was to assist in the process. We took off our boots guides through the bush, waiting for what a mile we came again on the river, which was rushing deep and swift through reeds and Tt-tree. A rickety cause was waiting there, in which we crossed, climbed up a bank, and stretched before us we saw the White Terrace in all its strangeness, a crystal staircase, gliting out like an open fan from a point above us on the hillside, and projecting at the bottom into a lake, where it was perhaps two hundred yards wide. RAMONA'S HOME.

Camulos Ranch (Santa Clara Valley) Ventura Cv. (Cal.), April 27, 1886. In travelling from Tucson to the Santa Clara valley a marked change is experienced. Here in California there is not even a suggestion of the barren wastes that are so and to oppress one in Arizona. From Newhall where just now all the talk is in regard to the proposed new railroad to Camulos, the Santa Clara valley is a garden. By the roadside is field after field of grain. It is strange there was never before this a railroad built into such a fruitful region. If I were an Easterner, and had never seen California, and should see it as I do now, robed in its bright spring dress, sweet to smell, beauti ful to look upon, as warm and pleasant as June is in New England, I should over after be a devoted admirer of the State and could always be ready to believe and inrequired us to bathe. Our two lady guides dorse all the pleasant things said in regard to it. But it is not as a stranger that I returu to California, nor do I saek this overland route simply because of its picturesquewith her own royal hands, had bathed ness. What I sought is this which I have Ulysses when he came to Troy. So Kate found, the Camulos ranch, the home of "Ramona," whom "H. The garden nearest the south side of the house is to nearly all who visit the ranch the most delightful feature of the place. It is barely an acre in extent, but is filled with trees and shrubs that give forth a rich fragrance and inhabited by many birds. In the centre of the garden is a large, deep basin, into which fall the waters of a fountain. Around the rim of the basin are nots of flowers and curiosities found in the adjacent fields. To the left of the fountain and extending down the east side of the garden is a long grape arbor, overhung with vines. It leads to the brook that runs in the shade of some old gnaried willow trees, where the maids are made in "Ramona" to do the washing of the Senora's luxurious household. It was there, too, at the foot of the arbor that Alessandro first saw Ramons, as she was busy washing the altar cloth that Margarita had carelessly allowed to become torn. Beyond the brook is the Santa Clara river, and from the south bank of that shallow atream rises a group of hills, one being capped with a liuge wooden cross, which "H. H." says the Senora Moreno caused to be set up, that it might serve as notice to all passers-by that they were on the land of a good Catholic. There is another of these crosses on the hill to the north of the ranch.
